

10 Tips for Parents of Gifted Students

1. Support your child

All children flourish in the care of supportive parents.

2. Identify your child's interest

Children require learning experiences based on their interests.

3. Request an appropriately challenging curriculum

It is a parent's right to collaborate with schools to design better programs for our children. In other words, feel free to share ideas with teachers.

4. Help your child set goals

Discuss with your child some things he or she wants to achieve within a certain period of time. These goals can be related to grades or to other accomplishments such as social goals.

5. Emphasize responsibility

Provide your child with opportunities to exercise responsible choices and allow him or her to experience the consequences of those choices.

6. Provide opportunities

Many schools offer programs after school that may be excellent learning opportunities.

7. Look for resources

There are many community resources available to children, (public library)

8. Encourage

It is important to encourage children to fulfill their interests and dreams.

9. Be an advocate of your child and others.

Forming groups of parents who are willing to collaborate with the school can help children by demonstrating to them responsible leadership.

10. Don't give up

Finding ways to support your child in developing his or her talents may be difficult, but it is worthwhile.
